

Baring Head

February 2011

Haere mai, welcome

Baring Head is now part of East Harbour Regional Park and open for everyone to enjoy.

About the area

Situated on the southern headland of Wellington Harbour (Te Whanganui a Tara), Baring Head's cliffs, escarpments and marine terraces form one of the region's most distinctive landscapes.

The property includes the lower reaches and the mouth of the Wainuiomata River and much of the coastal escarpment around Baring Head. It links with the Baring Head lighthouse reserve – the site of the second to last manned lighthouse to be built in New Zealand and automated in 1989.

The land has many geological features related to tectonic activity (earthquake movements). It is also an area of high environmental value, with a variety of ecosystems that contain rare native plants and animals.

Baring Head was once an important source for mahinga kai (traditional food gathering) and there are many related historic sites. More recent features include World War II lookout posts and the Baring Head lighthouse cottages.

What you can do here

Visitors are welcome to walk, run, mountain bike or picnic throughout Baring Head. There is good access to the Wainuiomata River for swimming. Beach boulders on the south coast are popular for rock climbing.
